

The Hanford Lampoon

Devout Defenders of Dubiety!!!

Ok folks. Look, semester one is over and we here at the lampoon think it is time to relax. Finals were tough and let's face it, wearing a mask has been truly taxing for us all. So take off the edge and the pretense of social obedience by lighting up some big green or perhaps that watermelon puff bar you've been itching to bust out. Just make sure to utilize Hanford toilet stalls for cover and when you're finished, unveil all your hot amateur graffiti skills on a school mirror and take your deep rooted insecurities out on those pesky hand drying stations. There is nothing quite like the aura of roadside lavatories and surely scrubbing phallic images off of bathroom stalls while immersed in watermelon flavored air is just a delight for our custodial staff.

Looking for some Valentine's Day Ideas?
Here are some recommendations:

- PDA - Don't let anyone doubt who you're spending Valentine's day smooching. Establish your turf in the middle of the hallway by making out—passersby surely won't mind the traffic jam you cause.
- Prepare in advance by picking out the perfect gift months beforehand. After inevitably forgetting what you planned to get them, 7/11 taquitos and a new UWELL pen will make perfect last-minute gifts.
- Fill social media with your significant other. This will act as a not-so-subtle flex over those that are clearly lacking.
- Ask Tory which staircase is best for that post smoke snuggle sesh—you wouldn't want to look like an amateur.
- Ghosting: Once Valentine's day is over, you must reassess and remind yourself that there is only one thing you chase: the bag

Don't have a significant other? Get one. Absence of a "boo-thang" reeks of unsophistication and baseness.

It has come to the attention of the Lampoon that the freshmen are back and worse than ever. Due to a lack of Social Darwinism, they seem to have no respect for any higher authority. To help, adopt a freshman today and teach them stomping on an empty milk carton in the school bathroom presents some pretty clear character flaws.

showing up to finals on time

being late because you got some juicy
KFC for the 55 minute lunch

College applications are in, and there are still about 2 months until decisions are released. Here are some activities with which to occupy yourself in the meantime:

- Impress everyone by buying a hoodie of your furthest reach school. Let that dripped-out grey sweater scream that you plan to drop cash for a school that will leave your grandchildren in debt for a mad career in communications. After all, the clout of being a "Harvard Applicant" is clearly undeniable.
- Hit that SAT score flex. Why not gloat over all those 8 hour khan academy grind sessions, boosting your SAT score by a staggering 10 points?
- Prepare for the worst: grab your parent's tax returns, your and fill your info into studentaid.gov—with enough student loans, you will be able to afford Stanford.
- Liquidate your parent's assets to give UCLA a sweet new fiction section. As Rick Singer once pronounced, "Fortune favors the philanthropic."